The Gastroenterology Ward at Delphi

Daniel Racey

Past the broad window by the dispensary
 Apollo falls to the sea, torching the bay.
 Hefty wives gather at the nursing station and mutter at the price of grain.
 Two patients who labour under the billious stone are the subject of discourse between physic and surgeon whose acolytes are solemn before the notes they write.
 Bed four is eighty three, a scrap in a shift
 - who enacts her Eleusinian rite by dancing.
 Not even Lorazepam can dim her burning.
 Later, I will take as libation an arterial blood gas from side room seven and offer it to the oracle in Pathology, asking "To which God shall we pray?"
