Journal of the Society for American Music

Journal of the Society for American Music (JSAM) is an international, peer-reviewed journal that explores all aspects of American music and music in the Americas. JSAM is dedicated to supporting scholarship that transcends disciplinary boundaries, cutting across historical musicology, music theory, ethnomusicology, cultural theory, and American studies. JSAM encourages international dialogue across disciplines. The journal features articles, reviews of books, recordings, and multimedia items, and explorations of special topics.

Contributors

Sarah Adams is the Keeper of the Isham Library in the Eda Kuhn Loeb Music Library at Harvard University. Her publications include articles on the dissemination of music in the eighteenth century, Mozart's "mixed" chamber music, and most recently an edited volume of symphonies for the critical edition of the works of Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach. She directed the student-curated exhibit that grew out of the Leonard Bernstein's Boston seminar.

Emily Abrams Ansari is completing her Ph.D. in Historical Musicology at Harvard, and teaches full-time in the Department of Music Research and Composition at the University of Western Ontario. Her dissertation concerns the involvement of U.S. composers in their government's Cold War cultural diplomacy campaign. In 2007 she won the AMS Pisk Prize for a paper examining Copland's work as a cultural ambassador.

Ryan Raul Bañagale is a Ph.D. candidate in historical musicology at Harvard University at work on a dissertation on Rhapsody in Blue. He holds a master's degree from the University of Washington with a thesis examining Asian American portrayals in the music of George Gershwin. He has delivered papers at the Society for American Music and the Experience Music Project and is a member of the Committee on Cultural Diversity of the American Musicological Society.

Shira Brettman graduated from Harvard University in 2007 with honors in Music and a joint concentration in History. After producing the documentary on Bernstein referenced in this issue, she continued her Bernstein studies with her Magna Plus thesis entitled "Bernstein and Hellman's Candide: The Politics of Failure in Post-War American Musical Theater," which analyzed the musical's failure in the context of the McCarthy era. She currently teaches history in a New York City public high school.

Raoul Camus is one of the founders and second president of the Sonneck Society (now the Society for American Music) and area adviser for bands for the New Grove Dictionary of American Music, second edition.

Joseph Horowitz's eight books include Understanding Toscanini (1987; finalist, NY Book Critics Circle Award), Wagner Nights: An American History (1994; SAM Lowens Award), and Classical Music in America (2005; named one of the best books of the year by The Economist). His most recent book is Artists in Exile (2008). He serves as Artistic Director of Post-Classical Ensemble (Washington, D.C.) and as Artistic Adviser to the Pacific Symphony's annual American Composers Festival.

Marion S. Jacobson earned her Ph.D. in musicology from New York University. As an accordion lover and ethnomusicologist, she has lectured and published on the role of the accordion in various ethnic and popular traditions. She is currently teaching courses in the humanities and world music at the Albany College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences while researching a book on the social history of the accordion in America.

Sheryl Kaskowitz is a doctoral candidate in ethnomusicology at Harvard University. Her dissertation presents a social history and ethnography of the song “God Bless America,” which traces the shifting meanings and functions of the song from the period before the U.S. entry into World War II through the aftermath of the September 11th attacks. She has presented papers at conferences of the Society for American Music and the Society for Ethnomusicology.

Scott Duke Kominers, Harvard University Class of 2009, is a mathematics concentrator, ethnomusicology minor, and economics enthusiast. His musicological research is predominantly historical and seeks to find new analytic methods for the study of music. Additionally, he works in a range of quantitative fields, including number theory, computational geometry, category theory, mathematical economics, urban economics, and law and economics.

Drew Massey is a Ph.D. candidate in Historical Musicology at Harvard University. A recipient of fellowships from the U.S. Department of Education and the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, Massey is currently writing a dissertation about the American pianist John Kirkpatrick’s career as an editor. His research has appeared in the Journal of the American Musicological Society and the Indiana Theory Review.

Carol J. Oja is the William Powell Mason Professor of Music at Harvard University. She is currently writing a book, Bernstein and Broadway, to be published by Yale University Press. Her Making Music Modern: New York in the 1920s (2000) won the Lowens Book Award and an ASCAP–Deems Taylor Award. She is coeditor with Judith Tick of Copland and His World and past-president of the Society for American Music.

Tom C. Owens is Associate Professor of Music at George Mason University. He is the editor of Selected Correspondence of Charles Ives (2007).

Howard Pollack, musicologist and pianist, is John and Rebecca Moores Professor of Music at the University of Houston. He is the author of five books, including Aaron Copland: The Life and Work of an Uncommon Man (1999) and George Gershwin: His Life and Work (2006).

Eric Porter is Associate Professor of American Studies at the University of California, Santa Cruz. His research interests include black and U.S. cultural and intellectual history, comparative ethnic studies, and jazz studies. He is the author of What Is This Thing Called Jazz? (2002), winner of an American Book Award. He is currently working on two books: one on W. E. B. Du Bois’s work in the 1940s and early 1950s, and one on cultural transformations in New Orleans before and after Hurricane Katrina.

Jonathan D. Sarna is the Joseph H. & Belle R. Braun Professor of American Jewish History at Brandeis University and director of its Hornstein Jewish Professional Leadership Program. Author or editor of more than twenty books on American Jewish history and life, his American Judaism: A History (2004) won the 2004 “Jewish Book of the Year Award” from the Jewish Book Council.

Kay Kaufman Shelemay is the G. Gordon Watts Professor of Music and Professor of African and African American Studies at Harvard University. She is currently writing a book on musicians of the Ethiopian American diaspora. A past-president of the Society for Ethnomusicology, Shelemay’s most recent publications include Soundscapes: Exploring Music in a Changing World (2nd ed. 2006) and Pain and Its Transformations: The Interface of Biology and Culture (2007), coedited with Sarah Coakley.

Paul F. Wells is Director of the Center for Popular Music and Associate Professor of Music at Middle Tennessee State University. He has published and presented papers on traditional fiddling and fiddle tunes, early country music, music printing, music of the Civil War, and Irish traditional music. He is a past-president of the Society for American Music.
