

From the Editor

As we ring in the new year and mark the start of the journal's twenty-eighth year of publication, I wish to announce a few changes to the editorial leadership of Business Ethics Quarterly. With this issue, Scott Reynolds (University of Washington) joins the leadership team as an associate editor. A leading scholar on ethical decision making, Scott will handle empirical and theoretical submissions in that domain as well as related areas including ethical leadership and moral psychology. Concluding her time as associate editor is Linda Klebe Treviño (Pennsylvania State University), who returns to the editorial board. We are enormously grateful for Linda's continuing contributions to the journal and the field. I also wish to mention the addition of two outstanding scholars to the BEQ editorial board: Sandrine Blanc (INSEEC Business School) and Tae Wan Kim (Carnegie Mellon University). Also with this issue, as previously announced, Miguel Alzola (Fordham University) assumes the role of book review editor, replacing Jeffery Smith (Seattle University), who served with distinction for the last four years. Authors and readers should feel free to contact Miguel directly with suggestions for book reviews. I am grateful to all of these fine colleagues for their dedicated service to BEQ and for all they do to help cultivate and sustain the journal's high scholarly standards and contributions to business ethics and corporate social responsibility.
