

A Woman's Place?

Perspectives on the Role of Women in Church and Society

Daughters of the Church

Women and Ministry From New Testament Times to the Present by Ruth A. Tucker and Walter L. Liefeld

What, actually, have women brought to the Christian church during the past two thousand years? This comprehensive survey not only explores the prevailing opinions about the proper role of women (both in and outside the church) as expressed through the centuries, but traces the historical contributions women have in fact made. Neither feminist nor traditionalist in its approach, this objective account is presented chronologically and includes topical chapters on women in missions and in the third world and a chapter on recent trends in women's studies. A Voice of Her Own

Women, Literature, and Transformation by Nancy M. Tischler

Dr. Nancy Tischler offers a challenging assessment of literature by and about women. Along the way she asks some difficult questions. Why, for example, have there been so few notable women writers? And why have they tended to be concentrated in only a few places, during only a few periods in time? Her perspectives anticipate a response from three significant audiences: the feminist, the church, and the reader of women's literature. Available. $8.95

Man and Woman in Biblical Perspective

Charles Grandison Finney, 1792–1875

Revivalist and Reformer

KEITH J. HARDMAN

In numbers of converts, and in sheer length of his ministry, Finney surpassed the other great evangelist of the 19th century, D. L. Moody. During the Second Great Awakening, this pivotal figure in American history was used by God to bring about the national revival of 1831.

In this indispensable biography, Dr. Hardman describes Finney's role as a catalyst in achieving the enormous shift which occurred in theology and its practice after 1825. This seminal work—the first full-length biography of Finney in nearly 100 years—is must reading for anyone interested in the development of modern evangelism, American religion, and reform movements.

“A most valuable selection of materials. . . .”

—James Packer

An anthology of some of the best English spiritual writing in the age of the Great Evangelical Revival, this book is an unprecedented gathering of representative witnesses to the work of the Spirit in the eighteenth century.

Emphasizing complete shorter texts, the book crosses denominational lines, including spiritual writings from Isaac Watts, Philip Doddridge, Elizabeth Rowe, William Law, Christopher Smart, John and Charles Wesley, George Whitefield, John Fletcher, John Newton, William Cowper, Hannah More, and William Wilberforce. The works range from sermons and tracts to thoughtful meditative devotional pieces, hymns, poetry, and pastoral counsel on every aspect of the inner life from daily prayer to the most practical consequences of Gospel obedience.

Through these selections the reader will recognize that, then as now, the real worker of revival is the Holy Spirit. As is always true of human instruments, these writers were “not that Light, but sent to bear witness to the Light.” In that they were willing to be instruments, it may be said of them, as it was of John the Baptist, that they become as “a burning and a shining light” to their own and subsequent generations.
