ECONOMICS FOR DEVELOPMENT

by Stephen Enke, Duke University

... distinguished from other texts in the field because, within a realistic social setting, it vigorously applies the basic tools of economic analysis (price theory especially) to the problems of the underdeveloped world.

This text takes a realistic view of foreign assistance programs, disproves some popular and easy "solutions," while offering a number of fundamental policy alternatives. It stresses the population "explosion," and what can be done about it; innovations and technical assistance, in agriculture as well as industry; and investments in human capital through health and education programs. March 1963, 616 pps., Text Pr. $8.95

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT: PAST AND PRESENT

by Richard T. Gill, Harvard University

Treating both historical development in economically-advanced countries and the problems of modern underdeveloped nations, the book summarizes the modern literature on economic development. Much of the material included has been written in the past decade, and has not, heretofore, received adequate presentation in basic economic texts. May 1963, 128 pps., Paper: $1.50, Cloth: $4.50 (In the Foundations of Economics Series).
